Do we control our tech, or does our tech control us?

Today's tech, while amazing, is a growing drain on our time, our focus, and our finances. Instead of serving us, our gadgets--and the content behind the screen--have become our masters.

In this book we'll work to change all this. We'll learn to turn our gadgets from items of desire to tools that serve our needs. We'll see what social media, left unchecked, does to us. We'll learn to buy the tech that fills our needs without wiping out our bank accounts. We'll learn, in short, how to redeem our time, our focus, and our money from our technology.

To make all this work, though, we need to learn something about our tech products and services. What do all the specs mean? What should I look for in a phone, tablet, or laptop? How can I save money on cell phone service, home internet, and all my other tech bills? This book and its companion website, putting-tech-in-its-place.com, will give us a helping hand as we work to take control our tech and put it in its place.
