The 7-Day Ketogenic Diet Meal Plan: 35 Delicious Low Carb Recipes For Weight Loss Motivation - Volume 3 Rachel Richards

Anatomy of a Ketogenic Diet Your body uses what you eat to give you energy. Carbohydrates raise your blood sugar levels, and your body reacts by producing insulin to deal with it. Unfortunately, insulin aids in converting glucose to fat, which is then stored in your body's cells. A ketogenic diet is designed to make your body burn fat instead of carbohydrates. It is comprised mainly of a high fat diet with low carb foods and normal levels of protein. Carbohydrates are kept below 60g on a daily basis. Slight overage once in a while is not too bad, but where possible less than 50g is the best way to go. This keeps the body in a state of ketosis, whereby the body is burning fat as the steady source of energy. The one thing that is sure about dietary requirements whilst on a ketogenic diet, is that of the fat content that you consume. This is essential as part of a ketogenic plan. Protein content however is a contentious issue – top doctors have varying attitudes to the amount of protein you should consume whilst on this diet, but these tips are for sure: -Protein is essential for producing energy -Protein consumption in the first 3-4 weeks of a ketogenic diet should be at optimum levels -At the beginning of a ketogenic diet, the brain needs extra glucose, and rather than glucose being supplied by loss of muscle mass, the daily intake of protein must be high – suggested minimum levels are between 3-6oz (80-150g) with 5-8oz/140-225g as an optimum level, depending on your weight, height and already established muscle. -Exercise is important for the continued development of muscle mass and strength. So certainly you should be optimizing on both protein and fat intake in those critical 4 weeks.
