The Crash Of Northwest Orient Airlines Flight 2501: Into Lake Michigan June 23, 1950 Robert Grey Reynolds Jr.

A Northwest Orient Airlines Douglas DC-4 crashed into Lake Michigan around midnight on June 23, 1950. No real explanation of the crash has ever been verified. Small pieces of the airliners surfaced over a 4 mile area of Lake Michigan, in Berrien County, Michigan for days after the tragedy. Coast Guard cutters and US Navy destroyer escorts participated in a search that became the largest in U.S. history, not to mention the largest on Lake Michigan. It is questionable whether a hull or main section of the Northwest plane remains in the water to be salvaged. My e-book considers all aspects of the airliner mishap, i.e. the passengers and crew, the eyewitnesses, the search effort and what has been written about the event in the 64 years since Flight 2501 was lost.
